market is made by the Stanfield's Manufacturing Co. This is a letter in answer to one we sent them asking information about a damaged pair:

"Gentlemen: Answering yours of May 10th we have examined the returned garment and it is pretty hard for us to tell just what is wrong as we do not know the manner in which the garment was washed. You say your customer was careful and washed them with Lux. The question is—were these garments put through a wringer, or were they wrung by hand? You no doubt know that Rayon material is very weak when wet and will not stand wringing—even by hand. If you will thoroughly wet the enclosed elippings of Rayon, you will find that it is almost as weak as a piece of blotting paper, and even in trying to stretch it you will pull it apart. Washing instructions are attached to each Nova Silk garment and if these instructions are followed closely there will be no trouble and garments will give endless wear. Garments should be sonked thoroughly in luke warm water in which Lux has been dissolved, then rinsed, the water can then be squeezed out and the garments should be hung over the back of a chair on which a towel has been placed—under no consideration hang on a cloths-line to dry as clothes pins will cause holes when the fabric is wet. N. B. follow these directions and we all will be happy."
